SOURCE EVALUATIONS ARE DEFINITIVE. APPRAISAL OF CONTENT IS TENTATIVE.

1.  sketch  showing the position of barracks and installations in the area bounded by Eggesin, Torgelow, Karpin and Viereck. 50X1-HUM
2. Marked as No. 1 on the sketch is the Stallberg Barracks  Torgelow. It has at least 10 to 14 two-story barrack buildings of stone. At least six of these run parallel with and immediately along the west side of the road to Jägerbrück. The remaining buildings, of the same type, lie further west within the barracks area. Yet further west within the barracks area are administrative buildings, garages, workshops and a building used as a fire brigade headquarters.
3. Marked as No. 2 on the sketch is a colony of some 40 to 60 family houses for East German Army officers. Each house takes two families. The colony is laid out in development style, all the houses are identical, and it is not fenced-in. Among the houses are HQ shops for the use of the families.
4. Marked as No. 3 on the sketch is an ammunition dump. The area is difficult to penetrate or observe as it is heavily overgrown with trees and bushes. At least parts of it are fenced-in with a double fence. Scattered over the area are earthworks with ventilation pipes protruding from them. 50X1-HUM
5. Marked as No. 4 on the sketch is the Droegerheide Barracks , Torgelow. There are at least 10 to 14 two-story stone barrack buildings. In the north-east of the barracks area are administrative buildings, garages and workshops.
6. Marked as No. 5 on the sketch is a colony of some 25 to 30 family houses occupied by East German Army officers and families. There are a number of HQ shops for the use of residents and also a number of huts and dumps of materials belonging to some Bau-Union. A HQ inn which was formerly located here and served as an East German Army officers' club was pulled down some months ago and re-erected at a point further northwest (marked No. 5b on the sketch).

7. Marked as No. 5a on the sketch is another colony of some 50 houses, each capable of taking two families. All the houses are built in the same style and are occupied by East German Army officers and families.
8. Marked as Nos. 6 and 6a on the sketch is the Spechtberg Barracks  50X1-HUM
Eggesin. That part of the barracks located south of the path (known locally as the Panzer Strasse, and marked as 18 on the sketch) contains at least 12 two-story stone buildings and a number of smaller ancillary buildings.
9. The part of the barracks located north of the road and marked 6a on the sketch is considerably smaller and contains only 3 to 4 barrack buildings.
10. Marked as Nos. 7 and 7a on the sketch are colonies of family houses for East German Army officers and families. Each colony contains 40 to 50 houses and they are fenced-in. Spechtberg ranger's house (Försterei) is one of the houses and can in no way be distinguished from the others.
11. Marked as No. 8 on the sketch is Object Karpin  50X1-HUM located some 200 m. southeast of Karpin forest house.
12. Marked as No. 8a on the sketch is an ammunition dump. It lies within the corner made by the junction of two paths and is surrounded by a double fence. From the junction of the two paths it runs northeast and southeast for about 100 m. and is guarded by East German Army sentries. Earthworks, from which ventilation pipes protrude, are scattered within the dump area. 50X1-HUM
13. Marked as No. 15 on the sketch is the barracks known locally as Object Eggesin
The barracks lies on both sides of the Eggesin - Hinzenkamp road. On each side of the road are about 10 two-story stone barrack buildings. Neither of the two barracks areas is fenced-in.
14. Marked as No. 16 on the sketch is Eggesin firing range. It lies immediately to the north of Hinzenkamp and is used as a range for small arms. Target ranges for rifles, machine guns and pistols are laid out.
15. Marked as No. 17 on the sketch is a large training area used by East German Army troops. Tanks use the area for firing and driving practice.
16. Marked as No. 18 on the sketch is the path known locally as the Panzer Strasse. It is a sand path and runs from the Torgelow - Eggesin road to Neumühl. It is not closed to civilian traffic, but has been so damaged by tanks and is so rutted and torn up that it is now almost impassable for ordinary traffic. 50X1-HUM
17. No quarter master depot is known to be in the area of Gumnitz
